

for as a helpless infant, I was led by an experience that offered me an immense sense of safety—the experience of being a child of God. All at once I knew that all human dependencies are embedded in a divine dependency and that divine dependency makes dying part of a greater and much vaster way of living. This experience was so real, so basic and so all-pervasive, that it changed radically my sense of self and affected profoundly my state of consciousness for years to follow.
